

Where horses live

In the wild horses live together in a group which is called a herd. The herd is made up of the stallion (male) horse, several mares (female) horses and their foals (children)

The horses we use for RDA still like to live in fields in small herds. Spider and Bud are great friends, happily grazing the grass together

Horses live inside in stables when the weather is bad or when we need the horses to be ready for lessons. Horses still like to be able to see each other when they are in a stable.
